Mr. Walter was born in Louisville fortysix years ago and was a son of Conrad Walter, proprietor of the Clay-street brewery. He is survived by his wife, who was Miss Schene, and two children. He was a brother-in-law of Joseph Schene, Deputy County Clerk, and an uncle of Frank Dacher, Deputy Circuit Clerk. The deceased was a devout Catholic and an exemplary member of a family of devout Catholics. Shortly before his mother's death, which occurred a few years ago, she presented a magnificent nemorial alter to St. Martin's church, of which congregation she and her family were members. Mr. Walter was a mem per of the Roman Knights of St. John and of several other Catholic societies.

THE RENAISSANCE OF THE GAEL

O'Callaghan, Boston, Mass.—Dear Sir: some time this fall, the story of which is Permit me to acknowledge the receipt of written on paper made from Irish linen. your kind communication of June 13, which I received on my return home from a somewhat extended trip. We are favorable to any movement having for its years. However, he was cheerful through aims and objects the advancement of child that was "overlooked" has joined the band that rides the wind on broom sticks or delves for gold in their little red cloaks at the foot of the oak trees. The weird and mysterious, the trusting and serious name of the Gael, are depicted, they say, in this peculiarly characteristic and simple folk story.

The Gaelic tongue never died, though in many parts of Ireland it has slumbered for several centuries. But what is a century or two to a people overflowing with moral and intellectual vigor? Though the most brutal laws did dam up the freedom of this vigor's flow, yet it rose steadily and surely, till in sweeping away all opposition its virility is a surprise to the world. Policion law poetry belies. freedom of this vigor's flow, yet it rose the world. Religion, law, poetry, bellesletters, trades, arts, patriotism, all are enriched by the originality and sincerity of the Gael. The dramatist is now beginning to see his altruism, his romantic conceptions of the commonplace, his love of knight errantry, his universal sympathy with humanity, and in placing this admixture of earth and heaven before the world the Gael has not a groat to lose but the universe to win. The glowing imagination of Thomas Moore is only repeated over again in monasteries of our own day and in the seminaries of our own land, from whose sanctuaries have come the Farleys, Gibbons, Irelands, Quigleys, O'Donoghues and Hogans, these only taking the places of the Mc-Hales, Crokes, Walshes, O'Donnells and an emblazoned host of Irish intellects of not be said that our period is significant of a renaissance, because the same condition has heretofore existed, the appre ciation of the fact alone being wanting. This appreciation is now coming to the front and to this awakening to the mani fold ability of the Gael is due the use of the misleading term "Irish renaissance." in the days of Brian Boru and in 1798 as now, and in the days of Lover, Carelton, "Zozimus," or when a half century ago Erin's glowing bard addressed the land of his birth in the affectionate words of "Sweet Vale of Avoca" or the apostrophe found later in Lalla Rookh:

'Go wing thy flight from star to star, From world to luminous world, as far As the universe spreads its flaming wall Take all the pleasures of all the spheres, And multiphy each thro' countless years, One moment of heaven is worth them all.'

The true "Irish renaissance" will come only when the shadows that are beginning to scatter from the blue vault of The Right Rev. Bishop McCloskey Erin shall have departed forever. When come the real "Irish renaissance."
